SUBJECT :

E-Systems' Contracts

[REDACTED]

1. [REDACTED] This memorandum has been prepared to respond to Roger Carroll's question - Was Harold Brownman in a position at CIA that involved the award of contracts to E-Systems?

2. [REDACTED] Mr. Brownman was Director of an Office responsible for major system acquisitions at CIA from 1971 to 1973. As Director of this Office he was involved in the source selection process for award of contracts. He was the Source Selection Officer for major system acquisitions and also administratively approved smaller contract awards.

3. [REDACTED] All major system acquisitions are competed and many people participate in the proposal evaluation and selection process. A Source Selection Board comprised of a mix of qualified management, technical, business, and contracting experts is established to evaluate proposals and report findings to the Source Selection Officer. This Board is often supported by Technical and Management Panels. The Source Selection Officer then selects a source based on the findings of the Source Selection Board.

4. [REDACTED] During Mr. Brownman's assignment to CIA, he was the Source Selection Officer for one major contract [REDACTED] awarded E-Systems. The source selection procedure described above was used for this competitive procurement.
